

Nicola Dixon

Nicola is an environmental science and ecology graduate with a particular interest in biological recording. She has over ten years' experience working in the conservation sector including roles in biological records centres and with museum natural history collections. These roles have given her experience in the use of geographic information systems, data handling and project administration. Trained as a field botanist she is familiar with a range of botanical survey techniques, skills which she continues to develop through attending botanical meetings across the country. She is currently a member of the executive committee of the Wildflower Society.
